

Ronny QuevedoThe Sixth ManMarch 13–April 7, 2019*Reception: Wednesday, March 13, 5-7pm

James Fuentes is pleased to present Ronny Quevedo, The Sixth Man in the gallery's viewing room at 55 Delancey Street. The exhibition features new works on paper that employ mixed media to reconfigure the lines of the soccer field, gymnasiums, pre-colombian textiles, and constellations to present a narrative of multiplicity.

The Sixth Man brings together selections from the artist's ongoing series Every Measure of Zero. This series calls into question the point of origin as a malleable, unfixed position. Alluding to questions of identity, mapping, and the cosmos, these works were developed by a strict material process of embossing, transferring dress maker's wax paper by heat and metal leafing. Within these limitations, the artist generates a range of surfaces and colors to illuminate the invisibility and transformations of the manual labor that relates to his mother's career as a seamstress. Through his research in American indigeneous and pre-Columbian visual language, he draws a connection between textiles and interstellar space, resulting in geometric abstractions and mathematical equations.

"Having moved to New York from Ecuador as a child, I address displacement by focusing on personal memories and social environments," Quevedo explains. "I borrow from my father's biography as a soccer player, my mother's profession as a seamstress, the geometric abstraction of Wari textiles, the Nasca lines, the rubber economy of indigenous Amazonias, to name a few."
